Mulfingen, Germany.

Youth research has begun a new round of competition and is seeking young talent in the natural sciences, mathematics and technology.

With the slogan of "We like what you have in mind," young researchers can apply until 30th November to participate in Germany's best-known youth competition. The host of Heilbronn-Franconia regional competition is, for the fourteenth time now, the fan specialist ebm-papst.

Those who want to participate in Youth research should be curious and creative, with the willingness to accept the challenge and show what he or she has got. The research topic for Youth research can be chosen freely, as there are no predetermined projects. "The only essential rule," notes Bernd Ludwig, sponsor of the regional "Youth research" competition at ebm-papst, "is for the topic to relate to one of the seven subjects of work environment, biology, chemistry, earth and space sciences, mathematics/computer science, physics or technology."

A short description of the project is sufficient for application. A written draft does not need to be submitted until January of 2012.

"Individuals as well as groups with up to three participants can participate; participants must attend at least the fourth grade in the year of registration but not be older than 21," explained Ludwig.

The best participants will again win prizes (money, goods and special prizes) with a total value of some one million EUR.
